1. COUNTRY HIGHLIGHTS

Over two-thirds of respondents in Slovakia consider climate change to be a ‘very serious’ problem (67%, EU average 74%), although fewer than one in ten (8%, EU average 12%) see it as the single most serious problem facing the world.

More than four in ten (44%, EU average 49%) say they have taken personal action to fight climate change in the past six months. Yet when given specific examples this rises to nine in ten (90%), suggesting that many do not associate certain actions with tackling climate change.

- Seven in ten respondents in Slovakia try to reduce waste and regularly separate it for recycling (70%), very close to the EU average (71%).
- Over one-third buy locally produced and seasonal food whenever possible (35%, EU average 41%), while over half try to cut down on consumption of disposable items whenever possible (53%, EU average 56%).
- Nearly two in five (18%) regularly use environmentally-friendly alternatives to their private car (EU average 26%), although this share has decreased by 11 percentage points since the previous survey in 2015.

Over seven in ten respondents agree that more public financial support should be given to the transition to clean energies (71%, EU average 79%), while over eight in ten agree that their government should set targets to increase the amount of renewable energy used by 2030 (83%, EU average 89%) and provide support for improving energy efficiency by 2030 (84%, EU average 88%).
