

Question for written answer E-003499/2020
to the Commission

Rule 138

Roberta Metsola (PPE)

Subject: The euro as an international currency

Amid reports that China is pushing for the yuan to go global, aided also by its backing of vast infrastructural projects such as the Belt and Road Initiative and the fact that it has successfully pursued dozens of currency swap agreements with other countries, and against a background of growing American isolationism, how is the Commission pushing for the euro to have a stronger international standing and for it to become a truly global currency?
